

The Possibility of Everything

by Hope Edelman | ★★★★★

MEMOIR

REVIEWED BY LISA KAY GREISSINGER

What would you do if your child had an imaginary friend who seemed not only omnipresent . . . but malevolent?

Increasingly anxious about her 3-year-old daughter Maya's "friend" Dodo, Motherless Daughters author Edelman and her more spiritually minded husband turned a family trip to Belize into a quest to find a native healer to help their daughter. Edelman writes eloquently about her struggle to accept unknown herbs, whispered prayers and flower baths as potential healing agents, and about the desperation—and love—that drove her there. With vivid descriptions of Belize and its Mayan history, Everything is an intimate account of the struggles of parenting, partnering and faith.

